This is eminently proper, for if perchance a comma should be inserted where a semi-colon ought to be, there is no telling what terrible results might follow. Womferful changes are caused by not minding your stops and by not being particular with your punctuation. A minister was once hamled a paper to read in his church to the following effect: "A man going to sea, his wife desires the prayers of the congregation for his safety," but as the comma was placed after the word wife instead of the word sea, it sounded to the astonished audience something like this: A man going to see his wife, desires the prayers of the congregation for his satety." He is generally looked up to and has been frequently referred to throughout the latter part of the session by the delegates themselves as the ablest lawver in the body. accept a place upon the commission; but there could not be a wiser selection or one that would give more weight und influence to the work of the revision of the statutes. The delegate from Boyle is one of Kentucky's truly big men. As t an orator he ranks with the first in the State and that is equivalent to "with the first in the land." As a lawyer he has few equals, and as a practical basiness man he has been very successful. As a statesman and lawmaker he has exhibited preeminent ability, saving the convention from many errors and dissenting from it in many particulars. He i modest and retiring and will probably never seek political honors; but he would grace a seat in the United States Secare, reflecting credit upon his State, and sustaining her high reputation in that august body."

OF STANFORD, KY.

Capital Stock $200,000 Surplus 16,500

Attention of the public is trivited to the fact that thials the only National Bank in Stanford. Under the provisions of the National Bank Act, depositors are secured not only by the capital stock, but by the stockholders' Irability for an amount equal to the stock, so that depositors of this institution are secured by a fund of $400,000. Flive sworn statements of the condition of the bank are made each year to the United States government and its assets are examined at stated times by government agents, thus securing additional and perfect affectly to depositora.

This institution, originally established as the Deposit Bank of Stanford in 1853, then re-organized as the National Bank of Stanford in 1853 and again re-organized as the First National Bank of Stanford in 1854, has had practically an unintercupted existence of 32 years. It is better supplied now with tacilities for transacting business prompt by and liberally than ever hefore in its long and honorable career. Accounts of corporations, fiduciaries, firms and individuals respectfully solicited.

The Directory of this Bank is composed of T. J. Foster, of Stanford;

Forestus Reid, Lincoln county; J. W. Hayden, Stanford; S. II. Haughman, Lincoln; M. J. Miller, Mt. Vernon;

WEIGHING ARRANGEMENT.

A Stock Raiser's Ingenious Substitute for Platform Scales.

A neighbor who has largely combined stock raising with farming, frequently buying stock and feeding for market, employs a cheap and convenient method of weighing small animals. At one corner of a small yard or pen into which the animals may be driven an inclined plane is constructed for the purpose of loading them into wagons. This inclined plane is not immediately connected with the yard, a passage four feet wide and seven or eight feet long heading up to it, as shown in the engraving.

In this level part of the passage is placed the framed box or "cage," shown at Fig. 1. Five feet long, 31 feet wide,

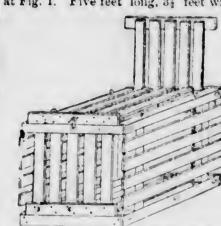

FIG. 1-CAGE FOR WEIGHING HOGS. and 4 feet high is found to be a very satisfactory size for this cage, as it will admit the largest hog or several smaller animals. The construction of this cage is well shown in the engraving. The frame is made of oak or other good timber not less than three inches square. Three crosspices below support a solid floor. Only two are mecossary above. These crosspieces, above and below, are mortised into the side frame 11 inch from the end, so that a hoard nailed across the end leaves an opening a little more than an inch wide, in which the sliding gate may freely move up and down. Such a gate is made at each end of the cage. The upright bars of the gate are laid in position and the crossbars fastened to them afterward, making it impossible to remove the gate. The ends of the upright bars extend an inch or more below the lower crossbar, aml enter the narrow opening at the bottom of the frame, thus holding the gate upper part of the frame and a heavy nish means of locking the gate down or 26 PROFESSORS AND INSTRUCTORS. holding it up. An iron rod, terminating carry the entire weight when the cage is suspembed. At the side of the narrow passage in which this cage rests is a large post, 10 feet high, notched at the top to receive the lever. The short end of this lever extending over the passage is necessarily 3 or 4 feet long, while the longer end should be about four times this length, making the entire lever 18 or 20 feet long. A piece of good timber 8 inches ter at cheap rates. Send $25 to the SUCCESSOR to THE LINCOLN NATIONAL by 4, placed edge upward, will be strong BANK OF STANFORD, enough for this purpose. To make it enough for this purpose. To make it lighter without weakening, the lower side of the longer arm of the lever is tapered off to the end, where it med not be more than four inches square. Here it bears against another post, to which it is confined by a guard of iron, allowing vertical motion only. In the short arm of the lever, directly above the center of the cage, a large ringbolt is inserted. Attached to this is a large steelyard. weighing up to 1,000 or 1,200 pounds. The cage is hung to the sheelyard by four chains of equal length, joined together above by a large ring and connecting below with the iron rods of the cage. It is intended that the two sides of the lever when the cage is attached should be nearly balanced, the short arm being a little the heavier. If it is not so, a box of stone placed on top of that part of the lever will make it right.

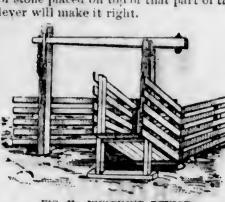

FIG. II-WEIGHING DEVICE.

Now for the method of operation. The gate of the cage next to the pen is raised, and it being several feet within a narrow passage and in a corner of the pen, there is no great difficulty in driving an animal into it. The gate is now closed and the cage with the animal in it is lifted from the ground by pulling down on the outer end of the lever. For this on the outer end of the lever. For this purpose a chain is attached, and when drawn down is hung on a stout iron pin driven into the post. The lever is thus held in position while the weighing is done. A plank laid across the fence above the cage serves as a platform for the weigher.
